They can hold 100% ownership of a condominium unit, but the condominium project itself must be at least 51% owned by Thais. The Land Code 1956 requires foreigners to have a leasehold agreement for land ownership. These regulations are designed to balance foreign investment with national interests. Regulatory Environment

The Thai government actively promotes real estate investment in Phuket, which has contributed to the region's robust growth. The Phuket Land Office is responsible for regulating land transactions and ensuring compliance with foreign ownership laws. Other relevant regulations include the Condominium Act BE 2522, the Real Estate Brokerage Act BE 2545, and the Thai Tax Code.

Phuket's Sustainable and Green Building Initiatives

Phuket's commitment to sustainable development extends to its construction industry. Green building initiatives are gaining traction, with developers incorporating eco-friendly materials, energy-efficient technologies, and water conservation measures.

These initiatives contribute to reducing environmental impact, promoting healthier living spaces, and enhancing property values.
